

LEONCAVALLO IN RAGE DEFENDS ITALIAN MUSIC

"Attempts to Force Genius Thro' Wagnerian Sieve," Declares Composer, "Must Fail."

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.) Paris, October 18.—Leoncavallo, the distinguished Italian composer, in an interview yesterday, gave voice to some decided opinions on the various so-called "schools" of music and their influence.

"Why should anybody to-day be compelled to express himself only in terms of Wagner?" the Italian demanded. "The attempt to force Italian music, for instance, through the Wagnerian sieve must inevitably fail; it squeezes out all the juice, spoils the sieve, and leaves but a squashed and gruesome mess."

"Parfance" is a clean and noble theme compared with "Salome," which is dirt. As for the methods and effects of Strauss, the purpose of his music is to distinguish voices in the din of passing crowds. But you might as well put a lot of nails in a bag, click them, and try to distinguish the special click of a given nail.

"We poor, benighted Italians knew nothing of those things! As if all of us are ignorant of Bach and Beethoven, of Berlioz and Wagner himself. The pretension is grossly inevitable, precisely because we are acquainted as fully, perhaps, as Strauss himself—with every thing that those masters have achieved that we reject the bag of nails!

"Distinction of theme, simplicity of expression, nobility of melody and harmony are not incompatible with the profoundest knowledge and the most original instrumental scoring. That's just it. Those great masters of old were fine in their ideas; but these masters of to-morrow, though they possess all the secrets of their predecessors and one or two of their own, do not possess really grand ideas."

"Their science and skill are employed to torture conceptions which are poor, banal, dull and often dirty. Eccentricity, intricacy, complexity, strenuousness—these qualities are no compensation for the absence of great thought and high melodic distinction."

"And what boots it if silly, aimless, tormented with skill greater than undistinguished theme, though counterpointed with skill greater than Bach's, are scored for grand orchestra with an instrumental cunning that puts Beethoven and Berlioz in the shade? Nothing! It is all 'sound and fury signifying nothing'; it is rotten at the core, for the core of all is great melody!"

COPIES OF THE ECLIPSE

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.) Vienna, October 18.—Director Frederick S. Archenhold, the Imperial Astronomer of Berlin, gave for the first time in the annual meeting (during the Natural Scientists' Congress in Vienna) his demonstrations of the movements of the stars, and especially exhibited the last total eclipse of the sun from start to finish as taken through the monster telescope in Trepow-Berlin.

Archenhold says his telescope has the greatest length and magnifying power of any in the world. The glass is sixty-five centimeters across, magnifying 6,000 times and the whole weighs 2,000 pounds. It is operated by four electromotors. Its dome is divided in two parts. The projecting half moves within the telescope, while the other half may be totally removed. By this arrangement the air denities are undisturbed. Another feature of the telescope is that it is so simple a child can operate and turn it.

The entire construction is the fruit of Archenhold's genius and belief in the power of means, he was forced to arrive at the greatest results with the smallest outlay, and this magnificent sky searcher can be reproduced for the modest sum of $60,000.

Archenhold's leap into fame is a romantic one. As a young astronomer he announced having discovered a great nebula in the constellation of Perseus. This was disputed by the German astronomers, but Archenhold wrote to the Lick Observatory in Mt. Wilson, Cal., and his discovery was verified. For this he was given recognition by the German government and encouraged, the young astronomer decided to demand that Germany should construct a suitable telescope by which native astronomers might verify their own discoveries.

The expense was never allowed and, undaunted, he personally fought out the great battle for funds, and with his own energy canvassed the lovers of science in all classes, and in three short years, in 1896, he victoriously accomplished his end.

Dr. Archenhold has received two honorary degrees from American universities, having been called to the States several times, and again in 1915 will make a tour of the American astronomical centers.

Dr. Archenhold is an English scholar, as well, and an author of noted text and popular books. Among his works are "The Secrets of the Sky," "A Day Upon the Moon," "The Secret of the Planets," "Messages from the Farthest Stars," "Scott and the Stars at the South Pole." All these subjects and many side questions are presented with moving pictures three times a week in the great audience room of the observatory.

OLD-TIME SPELLING BEE.

Pupils of Amelia School Defeat Citizens of Community.

Amelia, Va., October 18.—An old-time spelling bee was held at the Amelia High School last night, the contestants being the students against the citizens. A large audience gathered to witness the exciting contest, which was won by the high school. Misses Wallace and Enoch, of the high school, were the victors. The contest was held in the evening by a musical program which interspersed the spelling. The victor was Mr. Marshall, who was especially cheered by the audience.

On October 21 a picnic will be held on the school grounds in celebration of Patriots' Day. Speakers have been secured, and the day will not doubt be profitable and enjoyable. A meeting of the Parents League will be held in the afternoon. The County Teachers' Association will also meet on that day.

The Board of Supervisors at its meeting on Monday passed a resolution limiting number and the haulers having under four-inch tires on their wheels to certain restricted loads on the permanent roads now being constructed in the county. The law is 60 feet of lumber and eight railroad ties at a load.

Ties—Masse.

Palaski, Va., October 18.—A beautiful marriage and one of unusual interest throughout the county, was celebrated at the home of the bride, Miss Mary Louise Masse, of Palaski, the contracting parties being Miss Masse and Mr. George Masse, of Palaski. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. George Masse, of Palaski, and the groom was given away by his father, Mr. George Masse, of Palaski. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. E. Marshall, rector of the parish, officiating. The bride wore a dress of white with pink ribbon, carrying a basket of pink sweet peas. The ushers were Harry H. Nicholson, William Woodbury, uncle of the bride, William Masse, a brother, and D. Gray Langhorne. The church was decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers, the color design being carried out in green and pink. The bride and groom were given away by their fathers, and the ceremony was a most beautiful one.
